Response to Teen Tragedy

This letter is in response to the suicide of Christopher Dow, a 16year-old gay man who committed suicide last fall whose story was featured in a recent Sacramento Bee.

t saddens me greatly to see that, although we have worked so hard to prevent such occurances, they still happen. I would like to propose that we contact the Mira Loma High School principal-as well as their district office-to offer our support and assistance in training their students and teachers on how to help GLBT

I remember that we used to have panels of speakers go out and do [something similar to] this in what was then called "Sensitivity Trainings." If there is no one currently in charge of such a program, I volunteer myself to head/run such a thing.

It has been made extremely clear to me that [sensitivity training is] desperately needed in the Sacramento area, and we should definitely be at the head, leading it in the right direction.

Thank you for taking the time to read this message. Together we can make a change.

> In the bond of love and friendship, Bryan K. Walton

Dear Editor,

lthough some statistics conclude that black, heterosexual women now reflect the leading number of newly infected cases, community leaders continue to ignore a primary element linked to the continued spread of the deadly virus: Praying that HIV/AIDS disappears is simply, not enough.

Amid all the recent "Week of Prayer for the Healing of AIDS" publicity received of mainstream black churches, it's evident that African American leadership has finally focused some attention toward HIV/AIDS within its community. But they're still scratching at only a surface remedy to this epidemic with their current cam-

Instead of tackling the real enemy-homophobia-our leadership has redirected its arsenal toward the politically safe grounds of "abstinence only.

In the meantime, black gay men, feeling forced by their own society to deny-or even worse, hide their true human orientation just to fit in-are still marrying or are in traditional relationships with straight women by the scores. I ought to know: I've met many of them and was once locked into similar circumstances.

Women and children-used as camouflages to reinforce the "I'm not gay" façade-are often added to the mix when, as gay men, we choose to deny or hide our true identity. But eventually, many seek adverse remedies to their utterly confused state. After discovering little understanding among our pastors and other social confidantes, both good and-but more often-bad-remedies are enacted.

Horrified of being labeled as gay, husbands, fathers and boyfriends eventually seek understanding in the most dangerous of places: prowling through adult Internet chat rooms, or realizing "satisfaction" through secret rendezvous. This is popularly phrased as being "on the down-low."

Once satisfied, and often HIV infected as a result of their discreet encounter, they return home to the social safety net of their wives or girlfriends. Why not just be with a man instead of using their women like shields, as "identity deflectors?"

One reason is because Same Gender Attracted individuals of African descent still represent, like racism, the bane of black America's continued social evolution.

Until African American leadership earnestly commits to strategically battling HIV/AIDS, our innocent female population will continue to be at risk of becoming homophobia's ultimate victims.

On the Good Sidie

Dear Editor,

would like to publicly thank Terry Sidie for, once again, making contribution to the Lambda Letters Project.

Recently he issued a challenge saying he would match any single contribution of $1,000 to the Lambda Letters Project. We did find a contributor and Terry matched it. This is only the latest of several times that Terry has made this offer. Over the years he has donated several thousand dollars to support the work of Lambda Letters.

Terry has also been a supporter of many other groups and programs in our community. We owe a deep debt of gratitude to this very generous man.

The California State Assembly's Labor & Employment Committee passed a historic civil rights measure prohibiting hous ing and workplace discrimination based on gender characteristics. The bill, AB 196, is sponsored by the California Alliance for Pride and Equality, was authored by Assemblymember Mark Leno (D-San Francisco) and was co-authored by the four other members of the Legislative Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Caucus.

The bill now goes to the Assembly Appropriations Committee.

"AB 196 will provide critical protections for those who are fired, evicted, or experience serious harassment because they are perceived as gender non-conforming," stated Geoffrey Kors, Executive Director of CAPE

Also known as the Gender Non-discrimination Act of 2003, the bill clarifies that the state's prohibition of sex discrimination also prohibits discrimination based on gender-related characteristics, including transgender status.

The bill is supported by a broad coalition of organizations, including the California Labor Federation, the NAACP, and the California Commission on the Status of Women

Leno said, "The right to employment and housing is a basic human right. No one should ever lose a home or job because of gender characteristics which have nothing to do with one's qualifications

Kate Kendell, Executive Director of the National Center for Lesbian Rights, explained that courts, as well as California's Department of Fair Employment and Housing, usually interpret sex discrimination laws to include discrimination based on gender stereotyping.

'The insidious nature of discrimination based on gender non-conformity has been recognized and redressed by many courts," said Kendall. "Amending California law to protect all citizens from this type of discrimination is long overdue."

Kors added, "This bill is good for business and property owners, as well as employees and tenants, because it will explicitly clarify what constitutes illegal discrimination. AB 196 will help everyone understand the law by making clear the rules that already exist.'

Kors noted that a growing number of businesses and property owners have written letters in support of the bill, including the Greater San Diego Business Association and the California Apartment Association.

alifornia made history last month when Assemblyman Mark Leno (D-San Francisco) named Human Rights Commissioner Theresa Sparks the Woman of the Year from the 13th Assembly District. Sparks will be the first transgender woman to receive the honor.

The California State Assembly hosts the Woman of the Year ceremony annually as a way of recognizing outstanding women who have made significant contributions to communities across California.

Sparks was appointed to the San Francisco Human Rights Commission after years of advocacy on behalf of the local community. She served as a founding member of the city's Transgender Civil Rights Implementation Task Force and helped secure an agreement by the San Francisco Police Commission to adopt standards of treatment of transgender people previously recommended by the department's Office of Citizens Complaints.

Sparks additionally became the first transgender woman elected as Chair of the Alice B. Toklas Democratic Club.

"Commissioner Sparks is a stellar individual who has been a true trailblazer for our community and I am proud to name her Woman of the Year," said Leno. ▼

ssemblyman Paul Koretz (D-West Hollywood) has introduced two bills—one that bans a spermicide in condoms and one that establishes guidelines for post-exposure pro-phylaxis in case of inadvertent sexual exposure to HIV.

AB 879 will instruct the California Department of Health Services State Office of AIDS to convene a task force to develop physician guidelines for using post-exposure prophylaxis (PEP). While state guidelines exist for using PEP to prevent HIV transmission following sexual assault and needle stick exposures, there are no state guidelines for using PEP in the general population following inadvertent sexual Assembly Joint Resolution 16 urges the federal Food and Drug Administration to ban the sper-micidal additive Nonoxynol-9 from condoms and sexual lubricants. A press release from Koretz said that N-9 was once believed to be an effective chemical barrier against HIV and a variety of other sexually transmitted infections, but cited recent studies that have concluded Nonoxynol-9 not only does not help prevent STIs, but increases the risk of contracting HIV. ▼

Birth Certificate Issued to Lesbian Parents

Mississippi judge ordered the state to issue a birth certificate for a 5year-old boy who was born in Mississippi and adopted by a lesbian couple from another state.

Lambda Legal Defense & Education Fund filed a lawsuit against the state in 2001 for refusing to issue a birth certificate listing the child's two parents, leaving him without any legal documentation of his name, the names of his parents or the date and place of his birth

"This is a very significant victory," said Greg Nevins, the staff attorney in Lambda Legal's Atlanta-based Southern Regional Office who handled the case. "This child was punished because his parents are gay.

'A birth certificate is a basic and important document for every child, and today's ruling means this young boy should finally have his.

Cheri Goldstein and Holly Perdue took their son into their Vermont home when he was discharged from a Mississippi hospital, eight days after he was born. In April 2000, the adoption was finalized in Vermont and a request was made to have Mississippi amend the child's birth certificate to include his adoptive parents' names and his new name.

The Mississippi Board of Health repeatedly denied requests to reissue the certificate because the child's parents are lesbians. In a lawsuit filed in state court, Lambda Legal argued that the state was in violation of its own law requiring officials to honor valid out-of-state adoptions and provide amended birth certificates.

Lambda Legal also argued that the state's actions violated the Mississippi Constitution's guarantee of equal protection of the law.

The ruling comes shortly after a New Jersey court ordered that state to list both lesbian mothers on the birth certificate of a child they intend to

"All across the country–from the Northeast to the Deep South–courts are increasingly recognizing that children with gay parents are entitled to the same protections as every other child," Nevins said. "Today's ruling is an important milestone in this trend."

Title IX Threatened

he Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network and the National Center for Lesbian Rights (NCLR) recently expressed serious concerns over the the perceived threat posed to Title IX by the Commission of Opportunity in Athletics Majority Report submitted to the Department of Education.

According to GLSEN and NCLR, many of the recommendations in the report may dramatically decrease athletic opportunities and scholarships for girls and women, while negatively impacting other Title IX protections.

The intention of Title IX when signed into law was to level the playing field and create equal opportunities for girls and women in education," stated GLSEN Executive Director Kevin Jennings.

"President Bush and Secretary

Paige made a commitment to leave no child behind, but these recommendations, if implemented, will undoubtedly leave many girls and women behind, including lesbians and bisexual women who sometimes find the playing field a refuge from the harassment and bullying so prevalent in the classroom.

"If Title IX is weakened, these young women will lose valuable opportunities to gain self-confidence and self-esteem," said NCLR Executive Director Kate Kendell. "Given the pervasive harassment and discrimination faced by lesbian and bisexual girls in schools, the loss of these opportunities would be particularly devastating.

"We cannot afford to turn our back on these young people or to back away from the principle of equal opportunity." ▼

n arguments held in federal court last month, the American Civil Liberties Union is asking a federal judge to order that all clubs at a Kentucky high school–including the Gay Straight Alliance-can meet.

The ACLU argued that the Boyd County Board of Education's decision to ban all clubs is an unconstitutional attempt to shut out students who sought to form the GSA and violates federal and state law. The judge is expected to issue a ruling within a month.

"Public schools are bound by law to treat all clubs equally," said Tamara Lange, staff attorney for the ACLU Lesbian and Gay Rights Project.

She added, "By banning all

An ACLU release said that the hearing is expected to conclude with testimony from school officials claiming that disruption at the school by people objecting to the GSA justified suspending the club.

Highlights of the festival include a rare look at more than 40 works representing virtually the entire career of internationally acclaimed artist and CSUS alumnus Wayne Thiebaud and a performance by the Guarneri String Quartet.

The exhibition, "Wayne Thiebaud: Works from 1955 to 2003," opens April 4th and will remain on display in the new University Library Gallery through July 25th through July 25th.

The award-winning Guarneri String Quartet will perform on April 8th in the Music Recital Hall as part of the New Millennium Concert Series.

Other artistic offerings include an exhibition of watercolors by illustrator and Davis resident Yan Nascimbene April 3-12 in the Department of Design Gallery, in addition to a gallery talk and reception with Nascimbene on April 9th.

Graphic design will be the topic during a discussion led by designer and Cabaret, directed by CSUS professor Ed Brazo, will take place in the University Theatre April 3-6.

From April 3-5 at the Dancespace, Dale Scholl Dance/Art will perform Classical Meets Jazz. Directed by CSUS professor Dale Scholl, the performance will fea-turing four new choreographic works performed to classic tunes by such legendary musicians as Cole Porter, Irving Berlin and George Gershwin.

Also featured on the stage will be Sorta, directed by Sacramento native Doniel Soto of Abandon Productions. The production celebrates the joy and folly of simple human behavior through physical theatre and clown work. Performances will take place April 9-10 in the Dancespace.

Fans of the written word are invited to hear 2002 American Book Award winner Al Young read from some of his well-known work on April 4th in the University Union Hinde Auditorium.

CSUS creative writing program graduates Elaine Feller, Dan Hallford and Andrew Williamson during a discussion led by designer will offer a reading of prose and Clement Mok on April 10th in the poetry on April 8th in the University Union Hinde Auditorium.

Documentary film enthusiasts can view filmmaker Chris Simon's new film Down an Old Road: The Poetic Life of Wilma Elizabeth McDaniel on April 10th in the University Union Hinde Auditorium.

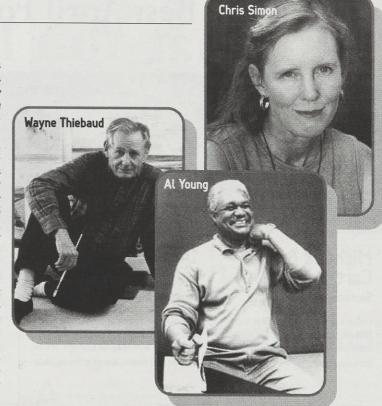

Music lovers of all kinds will find a range of performances of-fered by CSUS faculty and students to suit their tastes. CSUS professor Keith Bohm will give a saxophone recital at on April 3rd, and CSUS professor Dan Kennedy will give a percussion recital with guest Terry Longshore on April 9th in the Music Recital Hall.

On April 5th in the Music Recital Hall, the CSUS Jazz Ensemble will perform with guest Ingrid Jensen on trumpet and the CSUS Vocal Jazz I and II will perform on

The festival's musical offerings conclude with the CSUS Symphony Orchestra performance April 10th in the Music Recital Hall.

In years past, the festival has an estimated 20,000 guests. "Each year the festival gets better and better," says Roberto Pomo, interim director of the CSUS School of the Arts. "We are fortunate to have a good following from the community."

Fifth'a Great First

By Mary O'Neal MGW Correspondent

any reviewers often bestow comments like "can't put down" or "a page-turner" on new novels...and Zelda Lockhart's freshman effort Fifth Born is certainly worthy of this honor.

Readers are introduced to the shy and innocent heroine, Odessa Blackburn, born fifth in a family of nine children. She faces the world hiding behind her mother's apron until the next sibling is born and she is left with the often awful truths of her dysfunctional parents, uncles and aunts.

It's not hard to feel sympathetic for her when her father molests her and taunts her every move. He belittles not only Odessa, but every female he encounters.

Even though the story occurs in the late '70s, it seems that Odessa's Southern upbringing pushes the reader even farther back in time to an accepted genre of housewives, racism and neutered voices.

As Odessa grows into a curious adolescent, so do her troubles. Her older siblings are excited to leave for college with big plans and dreams, but Odessa is forced to be a housekeeper and nurse maid to her younger brothers.

Odessa begins to see that her body, soul and mind have been powerfully abused by her father and her mother along with the snickers and invisibility she feels from the rest of her family. A chain of events leads Odessa to the key that will unlock her tired spirit and free her of a beaten existence.

Lockhart's moving tale drives the reader to love Odessa and root for her survival until the very last page. Fifth Born is a knockout first effort and I am certainly psyched to take a second journey with the author, wherever it may lead.

Got a Lit Award

The Lambda Literary Foundation announces that the recipients of this year's Bridgebuilder Award would be Betty DeGeneres and Judy Shepard, both recognized for their capabilities and contributions to gay and lesbian literature as well as for their GLBT issues.

The award—and the announcement of this year's Lambda Literary Award winners—will be presented at a gala event in Los Angeles on May 29th.

The first Bridgebuilder Award was presented to Margaret Cho

last year.

"We are delighted to present the Bridgebuilder Award to Betty DeGeneres and Judy Shepherd," said Foundation Director Jim Marks. "Both in tragedy and success, they have put a human face on the gay condition and reminded us that we are all part of one family.

Betty DeGeneres, mother of actress Ellen DeGeneres, is currently the spokesperson for the Human Rights Campaign, Coming Out Project, and an active member of Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays.

With her 20-plus years of experience in mothering an openly gay daughter, she now lends her expertise to PlanetOut as an advice columnist on issues of coming out and acceptance.

Her first book, Love, Ellen, recounted her journey through a traditional conservative background to acceptance of her daughter's sexuality and her own remarkable transformation into a gay rights activist. She continues this theme of tolerance and understanding in Just a Mom.

In October 1998, Judy and Dennis Shepard lost their 21 year-old son, Matthew Shepard, to a murder motivated by anti-gay hate. Their ordeal moved thousands of people around the world to attend vigils and rallies in their son's honor.

Determined to prevent their son's fate from befalling others, The Shepards established the Matthew Shepard Foundation to carry on Matthew's legacy by embracing the just causes he had championed. This includes working for gay and lesbian equality, hate crime legislation, and raising awareness using programs developed by the Foundation.

Judy Shepard is determined to use her grief over her son's death to make a difference. She is now speaking to audiences nationwide about what they can do as individuals and communities to make this world a more accepting place for everyone regardless of race, religion, ethnicity, gender, gender identity and expression.

All proceeds from her her book, A Face in the Crowd: Expressions of Gay Life in America, and her speaking engagements go toward the support of the Matthew Shepard Foundation.

Noted author and co-chair of this year's Los Angeles presentation of the Lambda Literary Awards, Betty Berzon, said about this year's honorees, "We are so happy to be giving this award to two outstanding women who have raised the bar on awareness."

We've Moved to

We have a beautiful new space to help celebrate our 25th Anniversary! Featuring unique architecture lines, miles of square-paned glass windows, the building is a completely remodeled historical freestanding structure painted light gray with red trim and custom-made awnings.

Our neighbors are Kiyo's Floral Shop, the Capitol Tea Garden Café, Fox & Goose Pub, Old Ironsides...and the State Capitol Building is only six blocks away! We are also three blocks from Southside Park: site of annual Rainbow Lambda Fair held every June.

The inside is very loft-like: Lots of open space, exposed rafters, red brick walls, brick-colored cement floors, brand new electric throughout, new heat and A/C, a new roof...and the building has been retrofit for earthquakes!

A "Grand Opening" party will be planned once we get fully unpacked and organized...but in the meantime, stop by and say hello!

Teens OK with Gay

comfortable with the gay characters that are being depicted on youth television programs, according to a study posted by the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation

Rodger Streitmatter of American University conducted the study titled, "How Youth Media Can Help Combat Homophobia." Streitmatter surveyed teenagers about their reactions to the gay content on Dawson's Creek, Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and The Real World, and he examined attitudes about articles that focused on gay young people in magazines such as Seventeen and Teen

Of the 200 respondents, more than 90 percent were comfortable with scenes that talked openly about homosexuality as well as with scenes where lesbians or gay men were shown holding hands, hugging and kissing in public. 58 percent of the respondents were comfortable with seeing even more intimate contact between same sex couples, such as a scene from The Real World that showed two gay male characters lying on a bed and kissing.

The study also revealed that a gay person's physical attractiveness was not a significant factor in determining if young maga-zine readers liked that person. Only 22 percent of the respondents said they had the most positive feelings about the gay person they found to be the most physically attractive in the articles. Eighty percent claimed that an individual's character has far more impact than physical attraction.

The study also found that respondents did not dislike characters that were perceived as having stereotypically gay traits, such as a gay man who was considered to be effeminate and a woman who was considered to be masculine. V

STONE READER
(Not Rated, 128 min.)

It was a thrilling fantasy adventure involving a girl and boy about our age who discover an eerie plot by a nefarious organization to undermine families, and society as a whole, by embedding mind-controlling substances in children's toys. This book didn't just capture our collective attention, we loved it so much that we insisted our teacher read it again. We were hooked on a book quarter-century later Moskowitz picked the book up again. This time he couldn't put it down. So excited was he to tell friends about it that he searched all over for more copies. He couldn't find any. He couldn't even find any information about the author.

Mark Moskowitz had a similar experience at an older age. Late in his teens, in 1972, he picked up The Stones of Summer by Dow Mossman after an enthusiastic New York Times review convinced him to read it. Despite expecting it to be the book of his generation, he couldn't get past the first 20 pages.

Stranger still, no one he talked to about this book had ever heard of it or the author. It was as if the writer came out of nowhere, wrote a great book, and then disappeared of Summer" wouldn't ever be pubback into obscurity, never to write anything else again.

Stone Reader is a fascinating, thought-provoking, and at times humorous documentary about Moskowitz's search for the mysterious Mossman.

Calling it a search may be putting it mildly. He's obsessed with finding out all he can about the book, down to interviewing the man who designed the cover (he doesn't remember doing it at all) and the photographer who snapped Mossman's picture for the jacket (no leads there either). If he could have met the man who ran the printing press-or inked it or loaded it with paper-he would have

By the end of the film, he's purchased every copy he can lay his hands on, whether it's beat-up or shrink-wrapped.

As Moskowitz explains, "Everybody loves to curl up with a good book. What about a book that grabs you and won't let you go?'

No stranger to persuasive filmmaking-albeit of promos for politicos and other high-profile individuals-Moskowitz knows how to portray ordinary people in a way that draws you in. Cleverly, he unfolds the story quickly enough to keep you interested, yet slowly enough to tell a multifaceted story.

Along the way, the filmmaker finds himself sidetracked by other people he meets and the facts they present him. Sometimes he encounters a dead end and must try a new approach. He talks to the camera and shows his frustrations and breakthroughs with equal honesty.

s the months go by, we see the seasons change. Time to rake the leaves or do some real work that pays the bills. Rather than rush towards its goal, Stone Reader pauses to reflect on what's happened so far, and what may lie

During the year or so that it takes him to hunt Mossman down, Moskowitz shows us many interesting people whose lives revolve around books. Whether they're novelists, poets, editors, literary agents, or professors—some better known than others-they take keen interest in his quest. Each contributes a piece of the puzzle, even when they don't realize it. Together, they reveal a complex story with many twists, turns, and unexpected surprises

One sad refrain is the observation that a book like "The Stones

lished today. (Hopefully the son Emmett greets a FedEx driver film's popularity proves this in the driveway, tears open the box assumption false.)

Stone Reader is more than just a search for a reclusive writer, or on the easy chair. about a brilliant book that hardly anyone noticed; it's a meditation on Moskowitz knows that literature people's relationship to reading. and the business of publishing it-Moskowitz loves to read. Even when he's on a boring business trip, he packs several hardbacks along to plow through.

His love of reading apparently runs in the family. In one scene his has changed over the years, and that reading itself is challenged by other distractions, but he has faith that the youngest generation will still turn pages.

round 1300, for the Feast of the Seven Sorrows of Mary, the Italian monk Jacopo da Todi wrote a set of Latin verses describing Mary's sorrow at the foot of the cross at her son's crucifixion.

Over the centuries, dozens (probably hundreds) of people, including Pergolesi, Domenico Scarlatti, Vivaldi, Rossini, Verdi, Szymanowski, Poulenc, and many others, have set these words to music as the Stabat

In 1887 the Czech composer Antonin Dvorak completed his version in a particularly tragic period of his life, having just lost three of his children. Yet this work, conceived under such tragic circumstances, established him as a composer of importance in musical Europe

On March 8th, the Sacramento Choral Society & Orchestra, under Donald Kendrick, performed the piece for a near-capacity house at the Community Center. The fortunate 1900 people present had a chance to hear a fine performance of this seldomdone cantata (but not the West Coast premier, as indicated in the program notes, since it was done in San Francisco a year or so ago).

Listening to the work in its entirety in the theater, one can evaluate it better than on recordings. It opens with a descending phrase (later picked up by chorus and soloists) of great pathos, splendidly capturing Mary's profound sadness.

The hushed chorus enters on the words "Stabat mater dolorosa" (a mother stood grief-stricken) and eventually swells as the four soloists come in. As the work unfolds from this impressive opening, additional passages of great effectiveness emerge, such as the almost whispered phrases at the end of the second section describing how Mary sees her son's spirit slip away in his dying moments.

Yet after awhile one has the feeling of having heard a lot of it before as the work starts to become somewhat repetitious. Probably the piece is too long. The text consists of ten sections of some 60 brief lines, all de-

vorak's cantata lasts nearly an hour and a half, far too long for a text of such limited scope. The Requiem, another frequently set religious piece, contains great drama and sweep, and can easily support this much music, but the Stabat Mater is just too limited.

The performance itself was generally excellent. The huge 200-plus chorus was in full command of the piece. Surprisingly for such a large group, they were especially effective in the quiet introspective phrases, but of course sang out thrillingly when

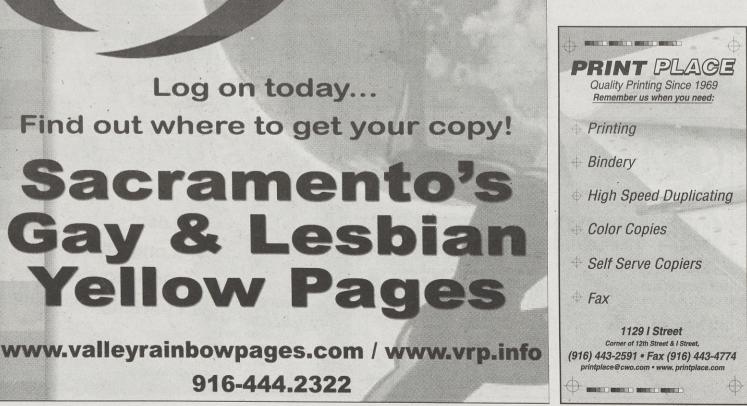

The male soloists (tenor Jonathan Mack and bass Philip Skinner) sang with great power and control, while the female singers (soprano Kristin Clayton and mezzosoprano Darla Wigginton) sang well but were too often drowned out.

Donald Kendrick's conducting kept this massive piece together nicely and he shaped it well, but he could have restrained his forces to keep from overwhelming the female soloists. The orchestra generally played quite well.

The first half of the program consisted of "Legends" nicely showing Dvorak's lighter side, followed by the oddly chosen 'Worthy is the Lamb," the final chorus from Handel's Messiah. This chorus seemed out of place here, and it was taken at a lugubrious tempo. Why not just let Dvorak stand on his own?

The final performances of the current season will be Orff's Carmina Burana on May 10th in Sacramento and on June 8th at the Mondavi Center in Davis, between which they take the work to New York's Carnegie Hall. ▼

atin pop star Jade Esteban Estrada has been nominated for Best Singer of the Year for the 6th Annual Timmy Awards.

Presented by Talent in Mo-tion Magazine, the awards ceremony honoring performing and visual artists took place last month in New York City [Ed. note: MGW went to press before the awards were decided.] He also performed songs from his upcoming album.

Estrada has been described 'the first gay Latin star," "a 21st Century Oscar Wilde," and "the diva of Latin pop." His music can currently be heard on the Golden Globe and Emmy Award-winning police drama The Shield.

He will also be giving a special benefit performance of his hit one-man show Icons: The Lesbian and Gay History of the World, Vol. I at the Hetrick-Martin Institute-the high school for GLBT youth in New York-in late April.

Estrada was awarded the Premio Estrello in October 2002 by LLEGO, the Washington D.C.-based GLBT Latino organization at the 9th Annual Encuentro Awards in Miami for outstanding work and visibility in the entertainment industry.

Common Canine Hip Problems

By Randy Jamison MGW Staff

any pet owners may be setting-up their dogs for hip problems by feeding them too much. Canine hip problems are not uncommon and can often be avoided.

The two most common types of hip problems in dogs are hip dysplasia, which is caused by a combination of genetic and biological factors, and avascular necrosis of the femoral head, which is caused by purely genetic factors.

Hip dysplasia most often occurs in middle-to-large breed dogs, such as German shepherds, great Danes, St. Bernards, and Labrador retrievers. It occurs when the head of the femur and the socket of the hip fail to develop properly, which can lead to degenerative hip disease and symptoms of arthritis.

Hip dysplasia can be treated by either managing it medically, such as through prescribing aspirin or other anti-inflammatories, or by performing surgery. The surgery can range from making minor changes in the shape of the femur or by a hip replacement.

Avascular necrosis of the femoral head most often occurs in smaller and/or toy breeds of dogs, such as poodles, Pomeranians and

When this occurs, the dogs lose blood supply to the head of the femur, which can lead to degenerative hip disease as well. Treatment often involves having the head of the dog's femur removed. Because of the dog's small size, most often it can still walk normally after surgery.

The severity of the problem may also influence the decision of what treatment to use. A mild case will usually be treated with medication and the more severe cases will usually be treated using sur-

One of the most important factors in determining whether a dog will develop hip problems later in life has to do with nutritional factors. Keeping a dog on the proper diet and minimizing feeding can reduce the risk of developing hip problems.

A dog should not be obese, should have a visible waist, and its ribs should be felt but not seen. Owners should watch the caloric intake of their dog and make sure it is receiving the proper percentage of calcium in its diet.

ost puppy foods contain 0.5 to 1.5 percent calcium, and that this is the ideal amount. Dog foods containing more than 3 percent calcium are more likely to lead to hip dysplasia or other skeletal problems. The best way to insure that a dog is receiving the correct nutrition and quantity of food is to consult a veterinarian.

When buying a dog, parentage is the most important point to look at in order to increase your chances of having a dog free of hip prob-lems. If both parents are free of hip dysplasia, there is a much greater chance of their offspring not having hip problems.

There are two major organizations that are working to reduce the incidence of hip problems. The Orthopedic Foundation for Animals is a non-profit organization that has established control programs to lower the incidence of orthopedic and genetic diseases. The foundation evaluates X-rays of the hips of dogs at two years of age or older and gives a rating.

PennHIP is another scientific method to evaluate a dog for its susceptibility to develop hip dysplasia. This method stresses the hips of the dogs as they are being X-rayed. PennHIP rates younger dogs.

Most young dogs don't show any outward signs of hip problems. But if your dog exhibits any of these symptoms—limping after exercise; if it has a waddling gait; is slow to get up or lie down; is reluctant to move; has a reduction of muscle mass in the back legs; and/or is protecting one side or is lame−contact your veterinarian. ▼

This is not to imply that any felines were injured during the production of the book, unless the featured cats that saw the photo proofs can indeed feel emotional injuries like shame and embarrass-

Bus ads pulled...

The Syracuse, NY, bus service has drawn criticism for rejecting a public health ad because it lists eight sexually transmitted diseases by name. The proposed ad was to read: "After a night of unprotected sex, you might not go home alone." Eight STDs (syphilis, genital herpes, HIV, gonorrhea, tri-chomoniasis, chlamydia, human papilloma-virus, and hepatitis B) were listed, along with the phone number of the AIDS Community Resources hotline. Bus company officials said, "These buses go to schools. I don't want an 11-year-old looking at his mom and saying, "What's syphilis? What's gonorrhea?"

Ad firms have observed that particular care must be taken in preparing ads for the Syracuse

Syracuse citizens recently required a local peace coalition to redesign anti-war ads, and two years ago took exception to an ad that featured model Claudia Schiffer in her underwear.

Research continues on preventatives...

Human trials on a vaginal gel that may prevent transmis-sion of HIV and other STDs could begin in Melbourne within months if animal trials continue to show promise.

If successful, the researchers will look at adapting the gel so that it could be used anally. The goal would be to "shift the capacity to control HIV infection to the one who is likely to be affected by penetrative sex," say the researchers.

Thus far, the gel has proved successful in preventing transmission of genital herpes and chlamydia. It is applied in the vagina before sex, and works by preventing the fusion of the virus with cells in the body.

The next phase will involve tests on monkeys to examine the minimum dosage required and the effects of repeat doses.

The president of the Australian Society for HIV Medicine cautioned that the road from animal to human trials, and then to market, is a long one, and researchers do not know how successful the products will be in humans. However, he said the results thus far are promising. A UC-San Diego study suggests that a vaccine to prevent HIV transmission may not be found for quite some time to come, and provides the closest look yet at how HIV evades the body's powerful efforts to churn out antibodies that can render more rapidly than previously thought.

The virus has long outwitted both scientists and the body's own defenses with its rapid ability to change and thus resist a treatment directed at it.

HIV evolves and mutates even

Fortunately, in recent years, HIV has been tamed by retro-viral and other drugs that disrupt its ability to replicate. But stopping infection in the first place is far more difficult. The virus protective envelope is a hotbed of variability, say the scientists, and mutates its protective coating "at an incredibly rapid rate" to stay one step ahead of the neutralizing antibodies produced by the immune system

The director of the vaccine research center at the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases notes that this has been our biggest challenge to developing drugs or vaccines.

Indinavir/Crixivan treatment calls for renal monitoring...

Noting a high prevalence of Indinavir-associated leukocyturia (white blood cells in the urine), sometimes becoming problematic with no warning symptoms, Dutch researchers are recommending regular monitoring of kidney function for people taking this protease

In a recent study, the researchers assessed 184 people taking Indinavir and found that 64 of them (35%) had to deal with leukocyturia at least once during the five-year follow-up period, and many more than once.

Persistent leukocyturia was associated with a gradual loss of renal function. But despite the high number of people affected, only 13 of them displayed urologic symptoms. The study also noted that increasing water intake while taking Indinavir is a good idea but that may not prevent this problem.

The researchers said they "cannot exclude the risk of irreversible renal damage after prolonged exposure" to Crixivan, and recommend regular imaging procedures and assessment of renal function for those on this PI.

Clues found to how men exposed to HIV remain negative...

Studies on men who have unprotected sex with HIV-positive women but remain virus-free show they carry high levels of antibodies that specifically fight HIV infection in the membranes that first encounter the virus, according to researchers.

The University of Milan scientists explained that people become infected with HIV during intercourse when the virus binds to proteins in genital tissue, allowing HIV to penetrate mucus cells, after which it eventually spreads in the body. But in a small number of people exposed to the virus, this process does not occur.

The study compared 14 HIVnegative men, who had been having unprotected sex with a positive female partner for at least four years, to seven men with no known risk factor for HIV infection.

The researchers found that 11 of the 14 men in the first group carried relatively high levels of the antibody known as IgA that specifically targets HIV in their seminal fluid. These "good" HIVtargeted antibodies were not present in the seminal fluid of the other men.

Scientists believe IgA helps protect the body against HIV by changing its shape and barring its entry into target cells, thus preventing those exposed to the virus from becoming infected. (Immuno-globulin gamma A is a protein found in body secretions such as milk, intestinal mucus, saliva and tears. Its job is to protect mucus surfaces from invasion of bacteria and viruses.

It may do its good work for insertive as well as receptive intercourse. It is this same antibody that is believed to protect a handful of commercial sex workers in Africa and Thailand, who are at high risk of having been exposed to HIV, but who surprisingly have remained negative.

The Milan researcher says studies are underway in mice and monkeys in an attempt to reproduce such natural mechanisms for an HIV vaccine.

The season of abstinence...

A record $120 million in federal money will be invested in abstinence education this year, including $117 million to ongoing programs and $3.5 million to programs targeted for one-time

Republican legislators from Pennsylvania, the recipient of over $3 million of the funding, said, "Abstinence education is very valuable in promoting a viable alternative to sexual activthus reducing STDs, unplanned pregnancies and single parenthood.

Abstinence-only educators welcomed the funding. Supporters of comprehensive sex education that includes disease-transmission warnings and condom information are dismayed by the new funding.

The Arizona Dept of Health is sponsoring an "Abstinence"

Until .Marriage" program aimed at low-income and unmarried drug users and alcoholics who are in recovery.

THE HIV FRONT * ON THE HIV FRONT

In this place of clean starts where people are trying to turn their lives around, say the organizers, these grown experienced men are dealing, many for the first time, with the stuff of high school sex education classes rather than what they learned on the streets.

After a discussion about STDs and HIV disease, the program leaders bring up values and virtues, including chastity. Those not in a relationship are encouraged to wait a year before dating again. Thosé already in relationships are encouraged to be monogamous.

When you're coping with recovery, you don't need the additional stress," said their nursing professor. Whichever decision the men make after completing the course, they know it is a choice and now have the information they need to make it.

An abstinence-until-marriage bill that passed Minnesota's education committee is needed because comprehensive sex education programs give students conflicting messages that may encourage sexual activity, say the bill's republican sponsors.

Critics say the bill could result in programs that do not provide students with needed information on contraceptives and Proponents of the bill says that educating our youth about diseases and condom use "is more destructive than helpful...This kind of education destroys young ladies' modesty.

Hospital worker sentenced for forging drug prescriptions...

An HIV educator from a Bronx, NY, hospital has been found guilty of forging AIDS drug prescriptions and then selling the drugs on the black market over a nine-month period. He had faxed hundreds of forged prescriptions to out-of-state pharmacies for the drug Serostim (a human growth hormone often used to treat weight loss)

Believing the prescriptions to be legitimate, the pharmacies then filled them, sent the drug to addresses he'd provided, and billed Medicaid, which reimbursed the pharmacies the $6,300 they charge for a month's

The man then sold the drugs, which carry a street value of over $3000 per transaction. In addition to jail time for the grand larceny conviction, he was ordered to pay nearly $2 million In Loving Memory of Friends Lost in April

Hot off of their victory in San Francisco, the Sirens returned home and trounced the Santa Rosa Scorchers 67-6 at Capital Christian High School on March 22nd.

The Sirens dominated the entire game with their explosive offense and dominat-ing defense.

They scored in each quarter and shut down the Scorchers' offense until the fourth quarter.

In the first quarter, the Sirens scored on a 22-yard rushing touchdown by Wicher and a 43-yard pass from Powers to HB Michelle Kahler. With both extrapoint kicks by Hilary McLaughlin good, the first quarter ended 14-0.
In the second quarter, a three-yard run by FB Dana McIntyre and a 19-yard pass from Limary to Trobee—as well as one extra-point kick—ended the half with 27-0.

extra-point kick-ended the hair with 27-0.

The Sirens scored three times in the third quarter on a four-yard rush by Giblin, a four-yard run by Wicher, and a one-yard run Limary. One two-point conversion and an extra-point kick finished the quarter at 47-0.

In the fourth quarter, the Scorchers scored with 14:47 remaining on a 25-yard run by FB Shea Cannon. The Scorchers' two-point conversion attempt failed, keeping the score 47-6.

The Sirens offense answered with a six-yard run by Giblin, and the extra-point raised the score to 54-6.

With 7:52 remaining in the game, the Sirens scored on a 21-yard run by Kahler, and the extra-point increased lead to 60-6.

Wicher dealt the final blow when she returned a punt for a 45-yard touchdown.
